> Sum up current big picture for U.S. social policy

From 1935 to 1970, idealized (middle-class) family structure assumed a father working for wages and a mother doing caregiving for children and other family members.

Family norms as well as realities have shifted across income strata: more single-parent households and two-wage-earner families with children or other dependents.

Social policy debates have shifted too:

- Encourage/support low-wage work via EITC, min wage floors
- New programs to help families/women combine wagework and caregiving – such universal early childhood education/care, family and medical leave benefits

Proposals for universal subsidized early childhood education or day care are emerging in the USA, but most recent action has followed two other paths:

- Government regulatory mandates requiring employers to provide, at their own expense, either paid sick days or options for employees to take weeks/months of family and medical leave without losing their jobs.
- Paid family and medical leave benefits a new form of social insurance funded by small, regular payroll contributions to allow employees to take extended time off for care of newborns or elderly or sick relatives, with portions of their wages/salaries replaced.

PAID MATERNITY LEAVE

The U.S is the only developed country that does not mandate paid time off to women after they give birth.

On February 5, 1993, President Bill Clinton signed the Family and Medical Leave Act – the most significant new U.S. social legislation prior to the Affordable Care Act of 2010.

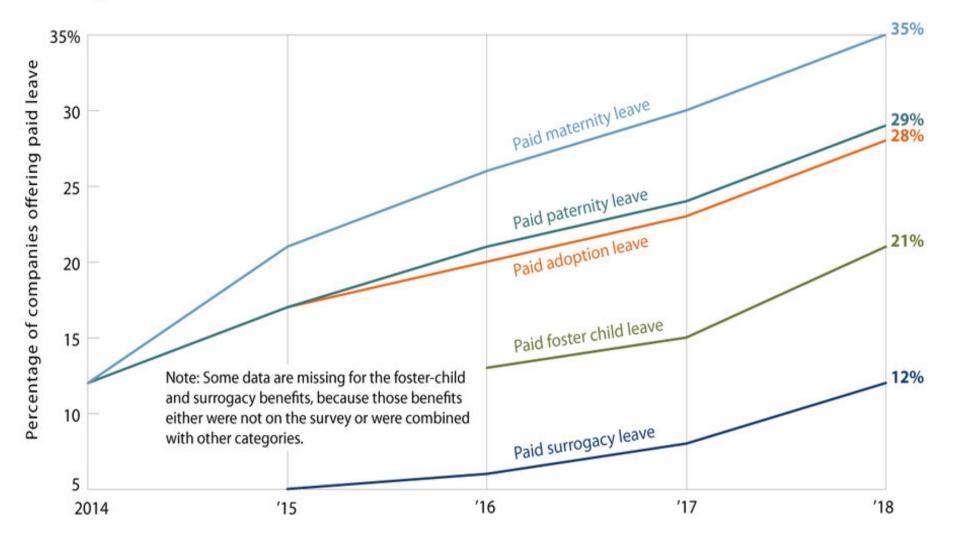

FAMILY AND MEDICAL LEAVE since 1993

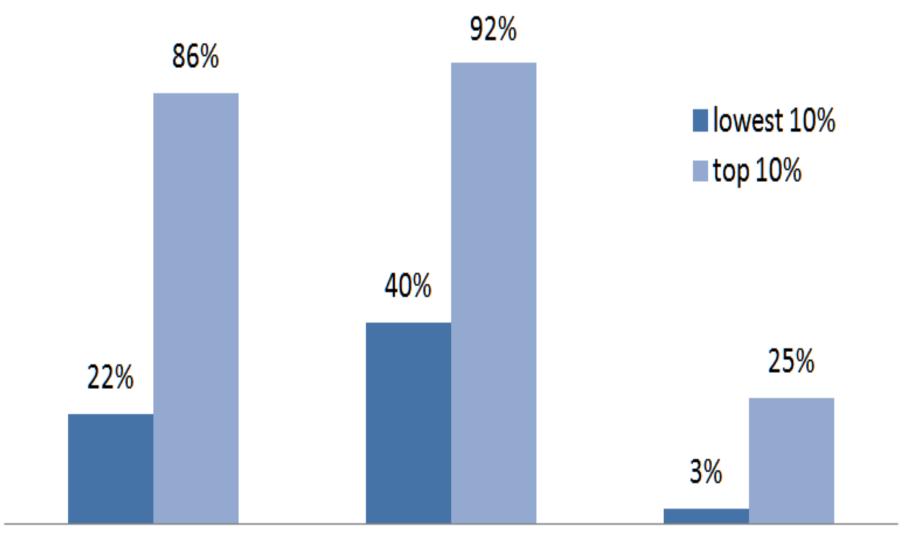

- The 1993 federal law mandated up to 12 weeks of jobprotected unpaid leave for newborns, adoptees, family medical care own medical needs, applicable to workers at large companies with 50 or more employees.
- Many major companies and nonprofits voluntarily offer paid leave to some or all employees – but many companies do not.
- Some states have mandated more generous unpaid leave rights and, recently, some mandate paid leave.
- The 1993 federal law did little to reduce inequalities, because managers, professionals, and public-sector unionized workers have been much more likely to use unpaid leaves or have paid benefits than low-wage workers (who disproportionately work for small businesses).

Rising share of employers offer parental leave

Because of demand from workers, more companies are offering paid leave, according to employer surveys. But the benefits are often limited to salaried employees, or are more generous for them than for hourly workers.

Another key family support is health insurance – which almost all industrialized and many developing nations have expanded to all or most citizens. Some use taxes to deliver or pay for coverage; others use regulations and subsidies to expand and supplement private insurance.

Since early 1900s, most US proposals failed, until...

- > Tax subsidies for private insurance from 1940s
- Public insurance repeatedly defeated until Medicare for elderly and Medicaid for some of very poor in 1965
- Clinton health reform defeated in 1994, Obama's Affordable Care Act finally enacted on partisan lines in 2010.

On March 23, 2010, President Barack Obama signed into law the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act

After two years of continuing public controversy and legal challenges from 26 states, the Supreme Court upheld the core provisions of Affordable Care on June 28, 2012

President Obama's reelection on November 6, 2012 ensured that Affordable Care would survive through the initial stages of implementation.

U.S. Health System Before 2010

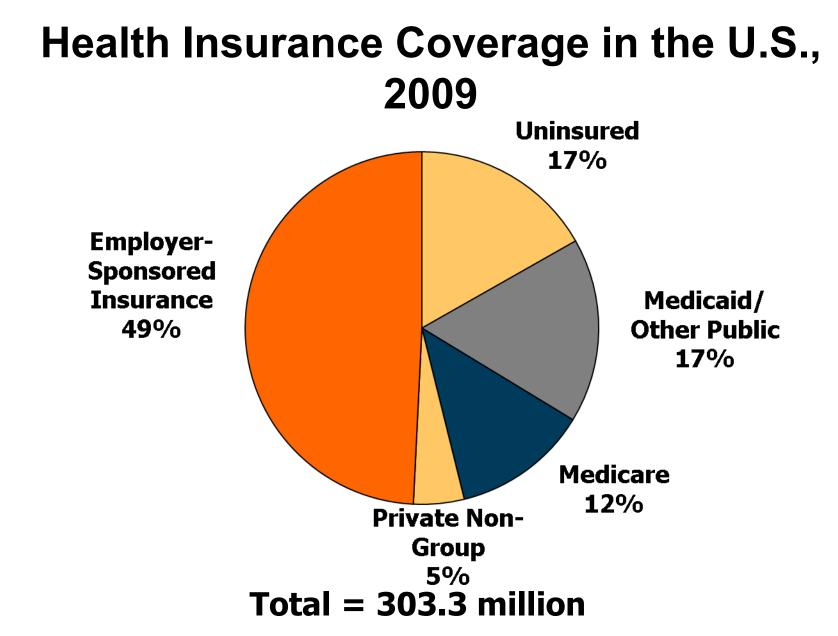

- After 1970s, private insurance increasingly expensive, with rapidly rising health care costs – and growing numbers of nonelderly Americans without insurance.
- Health insurance coverage skewed toward the elderly (Medicare) and the very poor (Medicaid), and to regularly employed middle and upper income citizens whose employers offer tax-subsidized coverage.
- Why does insurance matter? Improves access to regular preventive care and care for chronic health problems, reduces worries about bankruptcy, and improves mental health. Some studies suggest significant improvements in physical health and longevity.

The U.S. health care system had very high -- and steeply rising -- costs.

HOW DID THE UNITED STATES DEVELOP THIS KIND OF HEALTH CARE SYSTEM?

- Campaigns for government-subsidized and publicly guaranteed universal health insurance coverage repeatedly failed.
- Instead, government and private institutions ended up subsidizing employer-provided private insurance, the construction of acute-care facilities, and high-tech medicine.
- Private, fee-for-service physicians carved out leverage as the key actors in an intricate institutional system.

Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act of 2010

- New rules of the game for insurance companies: make profits but cannot exclude sick people or those expected to become sick.
- Make insurance available affordable for most American citizens: expansions of Medicaid and new subsidies for small businesses and for lower and lower-middle income people to buy plans.
- Each state establishes a regulated insurance exchange, on which plans are listed and can be compared by potential purchasers.
 Federal government sets up exchanges if states do not.
- Improvements in basic Medicare coverage, but cuts in high-end plans and slightly higher taxes for richest beneficiaries.
- New coverage for young people: parental insurance until age 26; expansions of Medicaid and subsidies to buy private plans.
- PAID FOR by taxes on wealthy and health care businesses.

Targeted Coverage Expansion Under Affordable Care Act

* Medicaid also includes other public programs: CHIP, other state programs, Medicare and military-related coverage. The federal poverty level for a family of three in 2012 is $19,090. Numbers may not add to 100 due to rounding.

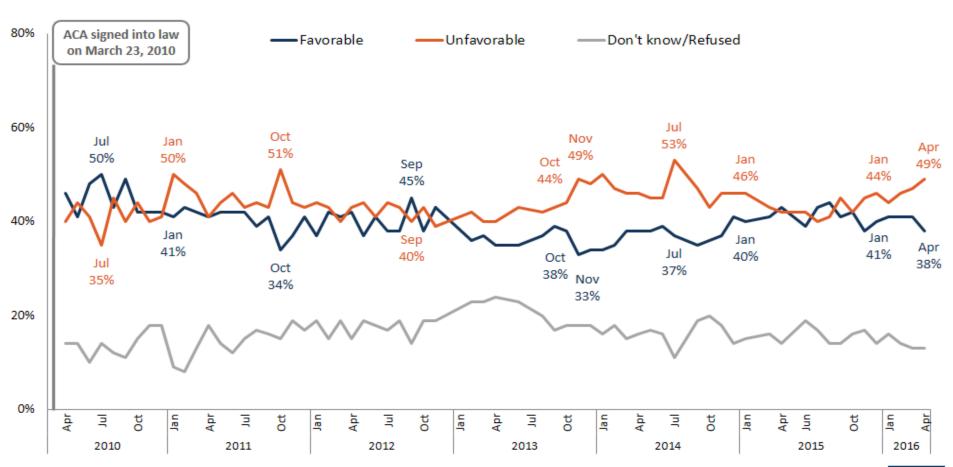

ObamaCare Implementation Challenge

- Spread out 2010-2018, leaving citizens unaware of key benefits and allowing opponents time to obstruct.
- Some national funding streams are set by law and HHS Secretary has considerable regulatory authority, BUT...
- Each of the fifty U.S. states makes pivotal decisions:
 - Set up exchanges? If not, federal fail-safe.
 - Accept the expansion of Medicaid? Supreme Court in 2012 sparked ongoing polarized political battles by removing federal disincentives for states that refused expansion.

As law was implemented amid continued partisan fighting, public opinion moved negative

Chamber Support and Medicaid Expansion

Conservative Networks Fight Medicaid Expansion

- American Legislative Exchange Council organizes lawmakers, private sector firms, and conservative activists to draft and promote model bills.
- State Policy Network links free-market think tanks and media operations in all fifty states. Within this network, the Florida-based Foundation for Government Accountability took the lead in making presentations, writing OpEds, doing polls and media blitzes across many states.
- Americans for Prosperity, Koch-sponsored, federated organization, coordinates media, activist events, and lobbying in policy campaigns.

- Medicaid coverage makes it easier for people to work or look for work.
- Covered people are less likely to have medical debts.
- More three in ten report better health since coverage (six in ten the same); and more get opioid treatments.
- Most who leave Medicaid do so because their incomes increased, they got jobs, or obtained coverage in other ways.

Average Uninsured Rate for the States That Expanded Medicaid vs. the States That Did Not Expand Medicaid as of 2018

Not just state-level Medicaid expansion, but the entire Affordable Care Act, has remained at the center of partisan and ideological conflicts since 2009.

- Conservative Republicans oppose a new tax-funded entitlement for lower-income and middle-income families.
- Tea Partiers and Trump enthusiasts (mostly mistakenly) see "ObamaCare" as a benefit for immigrants.

Democrats remained on political defense through 2015.

But after implementation and once Trump/GOP made repeal an actual threat in 2017, they turned to vigorous defense and pushback – with the grassroots 2017 resistance movement in the lead.

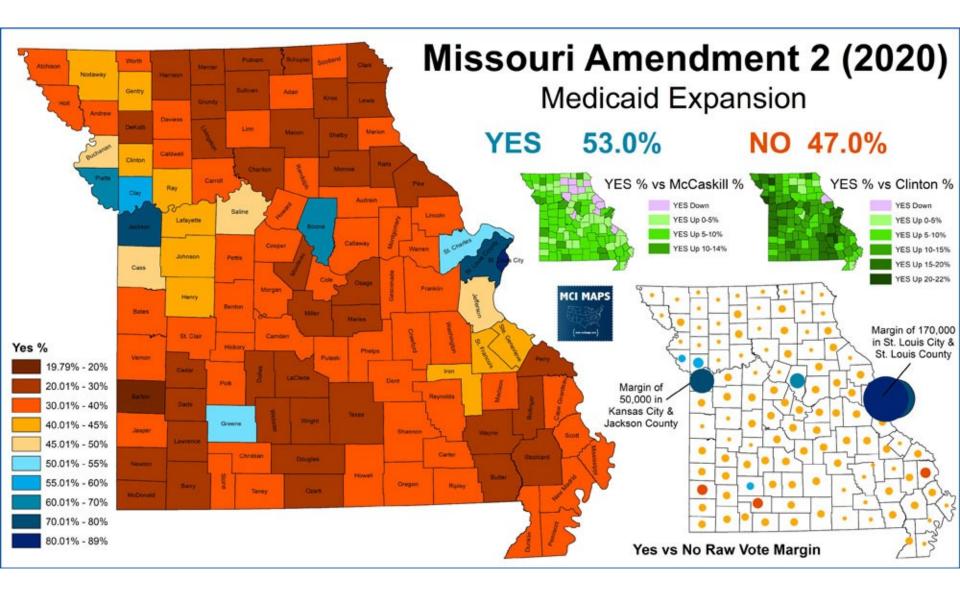

Activist originated referenda continued to push GOP-led states to expand Medicaid coverage – in 2018 in Nebraska, Idaho, and Utah.

And further referenda in 2020....

LATE 20th/ 21st CENTURY SOCIAL TRENDS and the EMBATTLED U.S. WELFARE STATE

- Social support/ direct spending increasingly tilted toward the elderly – with the exception of the Affordable Care Act, the most redistributive new social program in decades
- Total social expenditures and tax reductions remain tilted toward top earners and investors
- > Wages for most workers have stalled or fallen
- Job security and employee benefits have eroded
- Tensions between family life and work have grown for working parents and their children
- Partisan splits and polarization block most Congressional efforts to update policies or create new social supports for working families – and ObamaCare remains controversial, along with programs like Food Stamps aimed at helping the poor.

Trump's Health Record: At a Glance

- Supported repeal of the Affordable Care Act (ACA) and supporting lawsuit to overturn entire law
- Proposed changes to cap and limit federal funding for Medicaid and limit Medicaid eligibility
- Restricted access to reproductive health services
- Reduced insulin costs for some Medicare beneficiaries, effective 2021; proposed other ways to reduce drug prices (most have not been implemented)
- Made changes to immigration policy to restrict entry of individuals who are likely to use Medicaid and certain other public programs
- Signed federal COVID-19 emergency relief legislation; has delegated primary responsibility for COVID-19 to states
